Dear Carey:

I find, to my embarrassment, that my answer to your last letter is long delayed. However, my embarrassment is modified by noting that you promised to send me two papers by you, including one on Shackle, which are equivalently delayed. I would be most interested to see both of these; I hope you do have copies available.

I really don't think I can send out the Hitler material in its present state. However, I am presently editing a thesis on decision-making under extreme uncertainty ("Risk, Ambiguity and Decision") for issuance as a RAND Research Memorandum, and I shall send you a copy as soon as it is available. I am, of course, very flattered by your proposal to discuss my work in the terms you describe along with that of Schelling (I am, obviously, in many important respects a disciple of Schelling).

I envy you your visit to London, though from what I hear of the intellectual atmosphere there at present, your choice of "cold, calculating" American writers on defense to talk about may be regarded as somewhat provocative. I will be curious to hear your reception; I wish you luck.

Yours,

Daniel Ellsberg
